What If? Ehud Barak on War and Peace

Logline

Ehud Barak is one of the most controversial figures in Israeli politics. It seems there are two kinds of Israelis: those who venerate him, and those who loathe him. Admired for his analytic abilities, but criticized for the tremendous military and diplomatic risks he took, such as the attempt to assassinate Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein, or the failed effort to put an end to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. In this new Ran Tal's film, Barak observes with disillusioned clarity his own history and the history of the State Israel.

Synopsis

Can a leader succeed in influencing the world? Or is he a human being like anyone else, only a grain of sand tossed to the waves of history with no ability to affect it? Tolstoy pondered this question in War and Peace.

78-year-old Ehud Barak is the controversial former prime minister, decorated and criticized commander on the battlefield, and one of the leading figures of the Zionist movement. He is also the initiator of Israel's assassination plan of Yasser Arafat.

In this remarkable film, Barak observes with disillusioned clarity his own history and the history of the State Israel. Twenty years after the failure of the 2000 Camp David summit, Barak looks back on his life and analyzes the Israeli reality with a critical eye.

Respected craft-master filmmaker RAL TAL (THE MUSEUM, THE GARDEN OF EDEN, CHILDREN OF THE SUN), known for his narrative fiction style in his formalist approach to documentary cinema, delivers an outstanding philosophical essay, and proposes a deep cinematic reflection on history and decision-making, while trying to figure it all out - "What if?"

Historical Background

Ehud Barak is one of the most controversial figures in Israeli politics. It seems there are two kinds of Israelis: those who venerate him and those who loathe him. On one hand, many people admire his analytic abilities, but on the other hand many criticize him for the tremendous military and diplomatic risks he took, such as the attempt to assassinate Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein or the failed effort to put an end to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Barak was born in the early 1940s to the elite Zionist society of the time - the kibbutz. To a great extent he can be seen as the fulfillment of the Zionist dream of creating a "new Jew" in Israel. His childhood was a typical combination of love for Israel's nature and Zionist ideology. He enlisted in the IDF and soon found himself in the army's most elite unit, the General Staff Reconnaissance Unit, a new, relatively unknown unit at the time. Within a few years he was appointed unit commander, eventually becoming the most-decorated soldier in IDF history. He participated in many commando operations, including the IDF's most glorified missions such as the takeover of Sabena Flight 571 and Operation Spring of Youth in the heart of Lebanon. After taking an active part in the assassination of leaders of Palestinian organizations he became the chief architect of Israel's assassination policy which still exists and was gladly adopted by the Obama administration.

In the early 1990s, after running the gauntlet of Israeli leadership and even graduating from Stanford University in systems analysis and mathematics, he was appointed Israeli Chief of Staff. As Chief of Staff he planned the assassination of Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein. The operation wasn't implemented only because of an accident during maneuvers, but it revealed how far Israel is willing to go in its battle against its enemies. In 1999 Barak beat Benjamin Netanyahu in the elections and became prime minister of Israel.

In 2000, after barely a year in office, and after ending the Israeli occupation of Lebanon, Barak set out on the adventure of his life, initiating and pushing for an international conference with Yasser Arafat and Bill Clinton at Camp David with the aim of putting an end to the bloody conflict of over a century between the Jews and Arabs in Israel/Palestine.

The tension-fraught summit meeting was a failure, ending in bitter disappointment. Barak and Clinton blamed Arafat for its failure. In response, the Palestinians started the Second Intifada which cost the lives of thousands of Israelis and Palestinians and essentially killed the peace process and Barak's political career when he had no choice but to call for elections, in which he lost to Ariel Sharon, putting an end to the shortest, most turbulent term of office ever for an Israeli prime minister.

Barak is despised by his critics and enemies on the Left, who see him as the man who personally shot down the last hope for peace between Israel and the Palestinians and nearly wiped out the Israeli peace camp. His rivals on the Right accuse him, just as they accused Yitzhak Rabin, of offering the Palestinians the vast majority of the occupied territories in the West Bank and Gaza, including the Holy of Holies - dividing the city of Jerusalem.

Director's Statement

Today, as he approaches his ninth decade, Barak looks back on his life and the Israeli enterprise lucidly and honestly and addresses one of the most fundamental and fascinating questions that can be asked about leadership - Does a leader really mold reality as he wishes, or is he only a product thereof?

Unlike the populist leaders of recent years, Barak looks at his massive lifework from a unique perspective, combining his experience as a leader with his ability to analyze reality with a critical, objective eye.

In the film "What If" Barak asks himself and the viewers the big question: "What if he'd done things differently?" - Could he have done things differently at all, or is reality so complex and inflexible that nothing he did could have diverted it from its course?
